EMBASSY BALL RECALLSEVENT OF OTHER DAYS

HE British embassy came into its own again last night-in British Ambassador and Lady Geddes gave a ball for nearly guests. The company ran the gamut of society, official and nonofficial, and included in addition to nearly the entire diplomatic corps, Cabinet officers, justices of the Supreme Court, army and navy officers, with the ladies of their families, and friends of the host and hostess, and of members of the embassy staff from several cities besides Washington.

The Ambassador and Lady Geddes received the guests in the small drawing-room known as the ambassador's study. They were unassisted, but the wives of the members of the embassy staff-Mrs. John Joyce Broderick, Mrs. R. L. Craigie and Mrs. E. M. N. King-helped do the honors in the other apartments, with the bachelor attaches as their aides. Lady Geddes loked very young and very lovely in a charming costume of white faille em-broidered in silver. It was made with panniers of white tulle and trimmed with touches of orange ostrich feathers. She wore a becoming wreath of silver leaves in

While there were no formal decorations, the embassy, now shorn of the businesslike atmosphere by which it was marked during the war. was gay with autumn leaves and giant chrysanthemums in white, pale yellow and mauve. The portraits of King George and Queen Mary were banked with flowers, and the British flag appeared in the simple, dignified decoration of the fine old entrance hall. A large string orchestra, hidden behind a screen of palms, played continu ously during the evening. A buffet supper was served from a long table decked in the famous George III plate, which is the property of

BEAUTIFUL GOWNS.

Never, perhaps, has Washington seen more handsome women gathered together under one roof,-nor more beautiful gowns. And the jewels were magnificent, ropes of pearls tiaras, coronets and corsage rnaments of diamonds. Scores the women wore jewels in their hair and again—as at the French emhow popular aigrettes and other hair ornaments are becoming.

Blue seemed to be a favorite color, ranging from midnight shade to the lovely Romney blue which appears in so many of the famous artist's portraits. Mrs. Marshall Field had on a stunning gown in this tone and wore an aigrette to match in her hair.

Mrs. David Franklin Houston's ostume was of sapphire blue combined with silver and swathing her figure in long graceful lines. Mrs. Edwin T. Meredith was also in blue and silver, a wonderful gown and worn with wonderful jewels. Mrs. John H. Hewson and Mrs. Robert Lansing, too elected to wear the favorite blue and silver. The latter looked particularly lovely since the color combination was singularly becoming to her snow white hair and patrician face; and Mrs. John Allan Dougherty had on a gown of blue and gold brocade made over cloth

White gowns were also very popular. Mrs. Josephus Daniels work one, a simple but dignified model which was most becoming: and so did pretty Mrs. Sheldon Whitehouse (formerly Miss Mary Alexander of New York, whose lovely frock was
